Revocation Process

How counselling can help you

Crown requires you to attend a counsellor and obtain a report as part of the information reviewed by Crown's Revocation Committee to decide if you are ready to have access to the gaming floor.

For many people gambling is a form of recreation. However, sometimes the money and time spent on gambling can affect many aspects of someone's life including relationships with family and friends.

Since you self-excluded you may have forgotten the impact that gambling was having on your life at that time. Counselling sessions will help you understand why your gambling became excessive and help you avoid difficulties in the future.

You and your counsellor will be able to discuss what will assist you to return to the Casino in a safe and controlled manner and put in place strategies to help you reduce the risks of developing excessive gambling behaviour again.

It is likely that counselling sessions will cover the following:

- your previous gaming behaviour;
- the circumstances of your Self-Exclusion and why you decided to self-exclude;
- counselling you have had since self-excluding, if any;
- any breaches of your Self-Exclusion;
- why you would like to revoke (end) your Self-Exclusion;
- your current situation and readiness to return to gambling;
- what strategies (plan) you have for a safe and controlled return to gambling; and
- your support network for your application and return to gambling.

Gambling harm is often related to life stressors or emotional issues. If you wish, your Counsellor can also assist with these and help you to improve your personal relationships, which may have been damaged by gambling. The overall experience can have a very positive impact on your quality of life.
